There is just one thing that could clear the air. That would be a letter from Mr. Wilson to the divinely favored Joett Shouse, say, in which Mr. Wilson would abolutely eliminate himself. They point out that Mr. Wilson stands pretty well, that this could be done without prejudicing the interests of any candldate or without favoritism to any candidate, and certainly without weakening adorsement of an unqualified peace treaty and a reservationless League of Nations. Their reasoning in the matter brutally frank, for they say if the President could so express himself without affecting the nomination chances of another and without weakening the fight for a principle, then he must be keep-
